

Orchestrate. Harness. Or be orchestrated.

Give AI clear jobs. Keep the work organized. Check what comes back.
Or someone else will decide how your expertise fits into their process.

AI Quotient (AIQ): how well you use AI, check its work and lead others doing the same.

AI helps with the parts. You judge the whole.

01 Your experience is the advantage.

AI makes answers easier to get. You still need to know which questions matter, what good work looks like, and when an answer does not make sense.

02 More agents do not automatically mean better work.

Give each one a distinct job. Judge the result after checking and corrections. What is fun, what is productive and what is monetizable are different.

03 Inside an organization, prove one useful improvement.

Get permission. Try one small piece of work. Have someone else check it. Then discuss what the improvement changes for your role—not just your workload.

I DID NOT START WITH AGENTS. I STARTED WITH SPREADSHEETS.

I turned spreadsheets into tools. Then came Linear, repeatable skills, local models in LM Studio, and now Orca to organize agent work. Each step meant learning—and rework. My point: experience matters more when you can turn it into a way of working others can use.

WHERE I THINK THIS GOES

Possibilities, not predictions

Agents keep working

BETWEEN YOUR CHECK-INS

More work continues while you are away.
Someone must review what changed.

Agents work together

ACROSS ORGANIZATIONS

Your agent may coordinate with theirs.
Who is allowed to make a commitment?

Decisions move faster

THAN HUMAN OVERSIGHT

The risk: promises pile up before people can understand or stop them.

But trust, permission, money and the physical world do not move at software speed.

Make the next step yours.
